

ALIAS welcomes you to ISA-Midwest 2022!

The Active Learning in International Affairs Section (ALIAS) is a community of scholars within the International Studies Association dedicated to exploring active learning approaches and techniques (ex. case studies, simulations, study abroad, film) to teaching international affairs. We also encourage exploration of interdisciplinary active learning approaches and rethinking overarching curricular issues in international studies.

We are delighted to support the 2022 regional meeting of ISA-Midwest. This regional conference is known for showcasing cutting-edge research in a supportive environment, but it is also known for valuing teaching and mentorship.

As we look forward to ISA's 2023 Annual Convention in Montreal, I would like to personally invite you to consider joining ALIAS. You can become a member of our section when you renew your ISA membership, which will allow you to attend our business meeting on the Friday morning of ISA week. We are also excited to be hosting a reception in partnership with the International Education section, to create a space for networking and conversation around pedagogical topics.

GLOBAL SECURITY PROGRAM

We bring together UT professors, Baker Center fellows, graduate and undergraduate researchers, and other academics to inform and assess policies and challenges on key issues of international security.

The program's research has been supported by private, state, and federal grants and contracts. These grants and contracts allow for faculty and fellows to engage in interdisciplinary projects that have theoretical, empirical, and practical importance for scholars and policymakers on wide-ranging topics, including:

- War, crises, international and civil conflict resolution
- Territorial and maritime disputes, piracy and maritime security
- Terrorism and other political violence
- Foreign policy
- Nuclear security and proliferation

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

About the Journal

Each journal in the ISA group of journals has a particular mission and scope. ISP publishes three types of articles, all of which share the common requirement of focus and relevance to matters related to international relations/international studies:

Pedagogy

These articles present and analyze innovative teaching practices in the field of international studies in colleges and universities from around the world. Pedagogy articles are open in scope/method but must include empirical evidence approaches to teaching/learning and/or learning outcomes and must be grounded in the scholarship of teaching and learning.

Policy Relevant Scholarship

These articles analyze or address policy matters or debates (often foreign policy or global and/or transnational issues)—broadly conceived—linking scholarly literature to policy. Policy articles are non-normative, evidence-based, explanatory, and analytical/evaluative.

Practice

These articles offer insights into current trends in international studies in the academic and practitioner communities, including topics concerning the state of the discipline, methodological debates, publishing in international studies, the academic and nonacademic job market, professional development, and others.

Recent & Popular Article Titles include:

- Hiding in Plain Sight: Pedagogy and Power
- The Limited Scope of the Democratic Peace: What are We Missing?
- Climate Change and Environmental Security: For Whom the Discourse Shifts
- Anxiety and Covid-19: Impacts on the Profession
- Formulative Strategy: African Union Mediation in South Sudan
- Situating Contributions from Underrepresented Groups in Genocide Studies
- The Persistent Poverty of Diversity in IR and an Emerging Critical Canon

The Department of Political Science at Washington University is recognized as one of the top political science programs in the country. We really emphasize the science in political science here at WashU. Our students leave trained to observe the world, ask the right questions, gather the critical data, synthesize their findings, and effectively communicate the information. Political Science at WashU has been on the forefront of using quantitative social science – or data science – to answer some of the discipline's most interesting questions. Our alumni go on to pursue careers in fields such as law, public administration, urban planning, policy analysis, business, journalism, education, social work, and government. Our faculty study important topics at home and around the world, such as the origins of territorial conflict, radicalization and political violence, the development of democracy, partisan polarization and elections, and social media and misinformation. This research often has policy implications that shape our communities.
